

FASTI DUNBLANENSES

By the Rev. J. HUTCHISON COCKBURN, B.D.

STUDENTS of Scottish medieval history have felt the need of complete lists of the clerics who held office in the dioceses of Scotland. Such lists would provide useful information about many men of note, whose careers are difficult to trace without an amount of labour which few can give to the task; they would afford an interesting picture of the organisation of the Church, and enable the student to see from a fresh angle the rise and fall of the Roman Church in Scotland.

The late Bishop Dowden,¹ following Bishop Keith,² gave a reliable list of Scottish medieval bishops, but so far nothing has been done to set forth, with any claim to completeness, the names and dates of the lesser men who carried on the diocesan activities, many of them interesting and capable men who influenced the history of their country.

With some diffidence the writer offers this list of the men who served the diocese of Dunblane in the Middle Ages; it is no more than preliminary, and doubtless other students will be able to add to it information which will be gladly received at their hands. The medieval registers and charters of Dunblane have been lost, probably since the Reformation, and considerable search has failed to discover even a hint of their present home, if home they have. The particulars given have therefore been gathered from the papers of other dioceses and monasteries, from Papal letters, family charter chests, and other printed sources, and have been fitted together into a coherent whole. A list of the parishes in the diocese of Dunblane, with the names and dates of those who served in them, will be given later.

PART I

THE CATHEDRAL

EPISCOPI (Bishops)

The compiler agrees with Keith that the first Bishop of Dunblane is "M. de Dubblan." By no conceivable twisting of the writing in the Bull of Adrian IV, 27th February 1155, can the name be anything but "M." Dowden's footnote on p. 193 is a strange comment for a historian to make. Laurence is, therefore, in the writer's judgment, the second bishop.

For the rest, Dowden's list is admirably correct, and only requires some amplification in places.

A list of the Abbots of Inchaffray will therefore give the names of the precentors of the Cathedral, after Cristin. Cf. CAI: 249-257.

M. HENRY QUHITE, 4.6.1506-1.6.1530. Cf. under "Canon"; other dates as official are 4.6.1506-2.10.1509, 1521-1.6.1530; cf. under "Prebendaries, Kilmadock." CC : 261-4, 384; GS : I, 2969, II, 242; SK : 291.

28.7.1531. Official (unnamed). RVA : II, 504-5.

The small number of officials whose names have come down shows that in Dunblane the work of the official was done usually by the chancellor and his court. This finds confirmation in the fact that M. John Cristine (see above) was both official and chancellor in 1448, and in the number of mandates given by the Pope to undesignated officials of Dunblane.

CANONICI (Canons)

MALGIRHE, c. 1190. One "Malgirk de Mothel" is canon, c. 1198; in Bp. Abraham's time, one "Malkirg" is prior of the Keledei of Muthill. CAI : I, 175, 263, 264 (cf. "Carte Monial de Northberwic," 12).

INNOCENTIUS, 1214.

WILLELMUS, 1214.

NICHOLAUS, 1214. These three, RVA : I, 148-9.

29.1.1239-40.

By agreement between the Abbey of Inchaffray and Bp. Clement, the Abbot and his successors are to be canons precentors of the Cathedral, the office next to a dean. The Abbey is to pay yearly 20 marks for this dignity, and 10 marks for a prebend to be established in the Cathedral de novo, and the Abbey is to be freed from the $\frac{1}{4}$ tithes given by Pope to Clement with which to build the Cathedral. The Abbey is to be allowed to serve some of its parish churches by chaplains instead of vicars, while in other cases the bishop consents to a "modest" sum being assigned to the vicars.

For the list of Abbots who were, therefore, canons of Dunblane, see Charters of Inchaffray (CAI).

c. 1239.

By agreement with Bp. Clement, the Abbot of Arbroath and his successors were to be canons of Dunblane. The Abbey held the chapels of Abernethy, Dron, and Erolyn in the diocese of Dunblane. The Abbey was to cede to the Bp. the whole altarage of Abernethy and certain lands, the Bp. to provide service at Abernethy, and to supply a vicar of the choir to serve at Dunblane in name of the Abbot and Convent. The Abbot was to be installed canon and given a toft at Dunblane for his manse. All this came from Bp. Clement's effort to get the $\frac{1}{4}$ tithes as allowed him by Pope—see above. For the list of Abbots who were therefore canons of Dunblane, see RVA.

29.I.1239-40.

By agreement with Bp. Clement, the Abbot of Cambuskenneth and his successors were to be canons of Dunblane. In order to be free of the $\frac{1}{4}$ tithes (see above), the Abbey was to find 4 marks yearly for a vicar of the Choir to serve for them in Dunblane, 4 marks more to be at disposal of the Bp. The Abbey was to be allowed to have chaplains instead of perp. vics. at Kincardine, Tulybody, and Tulicultry, their three parishes in the diocese of Dunblane.
